SLIPS HANDCUFF TO WIN FREEDOM

"Smokey" Johnson Makes Get-away on Trip From City Jail to Police Court.

James Johnson, an escaped convict from the road force, who also flourishes under the name of "Smokey," executed the cleverest get-away from under the nose of Deputy City Sergeant T. D. Neal yesterday morning while in transit from the City Jail to Police Court ever effected in Richmond.

With his wrists fondly embraced by a pair of steel bracelets and chained for additional security to another negro prisoner, Bush Malone, "Smokey" James was supposed to be as formidable as a toothless bull terrier. Yet, while on his way from the jail door to the waiting patrol wagon, "Smokey" took advantage of a moment when Sergeant Neal's back was turned, quietly slipped his nimble hands through the handcuffs and faded into the landscape of Jail Alley and Broad Street before his guards were aware of his exit.

When his absence was discovered, he had completely effaced himself from sight, and while the officers sped into all adjacent territory, not even the fumes of burning ozone left by "Smokey's" flying person were noticeable on the breeze. An alarm was spread from police headquarters immediately, and although detectives and patrolmen searched the city, the elusive jail bird still remained at liberty last night.

Johnson was arrested by Detective Sergeant Wiley and Kellam on the double charge of being a fugitive from the convict road force and of shooting at Tray Holdbrook. When the case was called, Justice John superior to "Smokey's" name on the book, "Escaped from the custody of a deputy sergeant."

CAPITAL HIGHWAY GETS FEDERAL AID
Governor Mann yesterday awarded the national appropriation of $10,000 for the improvement of post roads, the Richmond-Washington Highway Association, in aid of the permanent road between this city and the national capital. By this action he evidently regarded the claim of a highway connecting the two cities as superior to any other of the many propositions made to him for the use of this fund.

The two other roads making the strongest bids for the money were the Bristol-to-Roanoke highway and the Houston-to-Danville highway. Both were backed by prominent people who are much interested in the development of these propositions.

Congress made the appropriation last year, setting aside a sum to be divided among the States and to be awarded in the construction of post roads where the localities spent at least twice as much Virginia share was $10,000, placed at the disposal of the Governor.

Officials of the Richmond-Washington Highway Association have made a strong bid for the appropriation. Many times the sum to be secured has been subscribed by the counties and cities along the line and by individuals. Part of the highway is already built, and the money is available for the rest.

NO PAYING FOR WEST CARY STREET
Thirty Thousand Dollar Improvement Stricken From List Because of Damage Claims.

Bids were invited by the Administrative Board yesterday for granite paving on West Cary Street from Rowland to the Boulevard. Because some of the property owners have failed to release the city from claims for damages by reason of the change in grade, the board struck the item from the list of improvements contemplated by the city, costing more than $30,000, would have been a great enhancement of value to all abutting property, making Cary Street a thoroughfare paved from end to end.

Practical releases from claims for damages can be obtained, the board yesterday instructed the City Engineer to advertise for bids for the following work: grading sidewalks and laying concrete curbs and gutters on both sides of Thirty-second Street from M to N Street; grading sidewalks and roadbed and set concrete curb and gutter on N Street from Thirty-first to Thirty-third; grade set concrete curb and gutter on both sides of M Street, between Thirty-second and Thirty-third Streets; grade the sidewalk and roadbed and set concrete curb and gutter in N Street from Thirty-fourth to Thirty-fifth; smooth pave Twenty-ninth Street from Grace to Franklin Street.

City Engineer Bolling reported that he had only two days' supply of paving brick on hand and that he had been unable to secure any brick in the city. He was instructed to buy 50,000 bricks in Baltimore at $11.50 per thousand and to advertise for bids for a further supply.

Excavations and earth excavated in the vicinity were ordered to be dumped into Thirty-fifth Street, between Clay and Leigh, with a view to opening that street across a ravine at that point.

LOCATE VETERANS FOR REUNION TRIP
Press of State Will Be Asked to Get Attention of Confederate Survivors.

The next step to which the men in blue of the Virginia Association in July will address themselves is the location of the survivors of the Confederate armies and navy, so that they may be brought together for a reunion trip. This presents many difficulties, involving great labor in reaching the veterans. It is estimated that not more than half the survivors are members of camps.

Colonel W. Freeman, the division adjutant, plans a request to the newspapers of the State to give publicity to the matter, so that the veterans will be physically able to make the trip. The report themselves to the local camps, or to chapters of Daughters of the Confederacy, or to the clerks of the courts, or to the chairmen of the county boards of supervisors.

Complete co-operation has been secured from the Daughters of the Confederacy, both in getting in touch with veterans and in engaging in the campaign to locate the survivors. The county boards and supervisors and city councils for the purpose of defraying the railroad fare of such veterans as are unable to pay their own way.

The supervisors of some seven counties have already agreed to pay these expenses, and it is hoped to have all others take similar action. James City, perhaps the poorest in this world's goods in the State, has agreed to do this, and has so reported to General J. Thompson Brown, division commander.

Butner-Conway.
[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
Fredericksburg, Va., February 20.—J. Calvin Butner, of Stafford County, and Miss Kate Lee Conway, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Conway, of Caroline County, were married last evening at Bethesda Church, in this city. Rev. Norman Luck performed the ceremony. The church was decorated for the occasion. Miss Elizabeth Russell, of Richmond, was maid of honor, and William W. Butner, of this city, acted as best man. The ushers were Dr. C. Wallace Sale, William Sale, Lewis Motley and William Filipo. The bride wore a blue traveling suit, with hat and gloves to match, and carried a shower bouquet of bride roses. The maid of honor wore pink messaline, hand embroidered, and carried La France roses. Miss Mahon played the wedding march.

Following the ceremony an elegant reception was tendered the bridal party at Haymount, the home of the bride's parents. Mr. and Mrs. Butner resided at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Butner, of Northern Neck, after which they will reside at the home of the groom's home in Stafford County, about ten miles below this city. The groom is a brother of W. W. Butner, Commonwealth's attorney of this city.

HE INHERITS FORTUNE FROM AMERICAN WIFE

Lady Leigh Died Without Issue, Leaving All to Husband.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

LORD LEIGH, who has just arrived in New York from England, with his sister, the Hon. Agnes Leigh, inherited a fortune of approximately $2,000,000 from his American wife, Miss Frances Beckwith, daughter of the late Nelson M. Beckwith, of New York, who was for a number of years United States minister to Brazil. Lady Leigh died without issue in 1905, leaving everything that she possessed to her husband. Much of her property was in this country, and administered by the New York firm of Evans, Choate & Sherman, and it is in connection with the interests which he thus acquired in America that Lord Leigh is now visiting New York. Lord Leigh has royal Tudor blood in his veins, being descended materially from Princess Mary, sister of Henry VIII., whose husband was the first owner of Stoneleigh Abbey, the ancestral home in Warwickshire of the Lords Leigh. The property is very large and yields a big income. It was used by Charles I. as his headquarters after finding the gates of Coventry closed against him, while the house is full of historic relics, both of the Tudors and of the Stuarts. Lord Leigh's elder brother was killed while out hunting after big game in the Rockies about a quarter of a century ago, and he has an uncle, a younger brother of the late peer, namely, the Very Rev. and Hon. James Wentworth Leigh, Dean of Hereford, who was married to the late daughter of Prince Arthur, of Philadelphia, and of Fanny Kemble, the latter of whom passed the closing years of her life in the house of Mrs. Leigh. Among Lord Leigh's ancestors have been Lord Peter Leigh, who bore the standard of Edward the Black Prince at Crecy; Sir Edward Leigh, who was killed at the battle of Agincourt, and Sir Thomas Leigh, who was Lord Mayor of London during the reign of Bloody Mary, and was knighted by that Queen.

Lord Leigh's grandfather, the first Lord Leigh of the present creation, was brought into court a little more than half a century ago, on an extraordinary charge of murder, trumped up against him by a claimant to his estates at Stoneleigh Abbey named George Leigh. This individual incited a mob to attack the abbey, and an armed fight took place there, which resulted in the conviction and sentence to imprisonment of about thirty of the rioters. Some months later friends of these men and of George Leigh charged the peer with murdering four workmen engaged in building operations at the abbey, by allowing large stones to fall upon them, and, further, with having incited the corpses in masonry in the abutment of the porch "to keep," as one of the witnesses put it, "the secrets of the house." The whole thing was, of course, the purest nonsense. But the affair took place at the times of the Chartism agitation, when the minds of the masses were excited against the aristocracy, and against the aristocracy it was not until Lord Leigh had proved his innocence in court that he was cleared of the crime imputed to him.

Stoneleigh, the ancient home of Lord Leigh in Warwickshire, then oak trees in the park over a thousand years old, and several Gothic oaks, under which the saxon missionaries preached more than ten decades ago, it stands on the site of an abbey built by Henry II. for a congregation of Cistercian monks. The property was held by the religious orders until secularized in the reign of Henry VIII., when it was bestowed upon the Duke of Suffolk, and subsequently passed, during the sixteenth century, into the hands of Sir Thomas Leigh, sometime Lord Mayor of London.

The present mansion, which was erected in the early part of the eighteenth century, at first consisted of a long and imposing range of buildings in the Corinthian style. Since its erection it has undergone numerous alterations, and is now one of the most comfortable seats in the kingdom. The various apartments contain costly pictures and statuary, including works by Vandyke, Rembrandt, Holbein, Guido, Teniers, Lely, Gainsborough and others. With another of the Leighs, a fine Vandyke portrait of Charles I., who stayed at the first Stoneleigh in the last years of his reign. There are also specimens of the sculpture of Canova, Bartolini and Baily. The private chapel has an altar of Carrara marble and pictures of the Crucifixion by Albert Durer, and the Virgin and Child by Perugino. The beautiful Italian garden in front of the abbey was laid out by Chandos, Lord Leigh, father of the sixth century, into the hands of Sir Thomas Leigh, sometime Lord Mayor of London.

The parish church attached to Stoneleigh Abbey is of early date, with a picturesque tower. The interior contains a quaint and curious carved font, which centuries ago stood in Marksbury Priory, near Colchester, an imposing monument of the Dukes of Dudley, wife of Leicester's exiled son, and numerous tablets to the memory of the Leigh family. On the south side, in a recess, is a quaint inscription to the memory of Humphrey How, porter to Lord Leigh (1688), which reads:

"Here lyes a faithful friend unto the poor, Who dealt large almes out of his lordship's store; Weepe not poore people that ye servants dearely loved are dead. The Lord himself will give you daily bread. If markets rise ralle not against their rates. The price is still the same at Stoneleigh Gates."

Lord Nelson, who is reported by cable to be dying, and who will probably have been gathered to his fathers ere this letter appears in print, will figure in the hereditary honors, as well as in the hereditary pension of £25,000 a year and in the possession of Trafalgar House, near Salisbury, by his eldest surviving son, Thomas Horatio, hitherto known as Lord Merton. Nelson was a confirmed bachelor, of near sixty, and his next brother, the Hon. Edward Nelson, who will eventually come into the honors and estates, is a convert to Roman Catholicism. He is married and has no less than five sons. The eldest brother, Herbert, was killed a few years ago by a fall downstairs. He was a bachelor.

The descent of the earldom of Nelson and of the hereditary pension of £25,000 per annum and of the fine country seat and estate of Trafalgar House, in Wiltshire, is rather curious. When Admiral Lord Nelson fell in the battle of Trafalgar, he left no legitimate issue. So the nation, in its eagerness to show its gratitude, bestowed upon his only surviving elder brother, the Rev. Dr. William Nelson, whom he detested, the earldom of Nelson, the Viscountcy of Merton of Trafalgar, and the barony of Nelson, along with the hereditary pension and the stately mansion, large park and big estate named Trafalgar, purchased by the state. The government stipulated that in the event of Earl Nelson dying without male issue, the peerages, the estates and the annuity should pass to the son of Mrs. Thomas Bolton, of Wells, Norfolk, the eldest sister of the great admiral.

Now the son of the parson earl predeceased his father, and the latter, on his death, left an only daughter. She, according to the Italian law of succession, inherited from her father the Neapolitan dukedom of Bronte, and all the valuable Sicilian estates on the slope of Mount Etna, bestowed by King Ferdinand and Queen Caroline of Naples upon the great admiral for his devoted services. The duke's daughter, therefore, Duchess of Bronte, in her own right, married Lord Bolton, and her dukedom and Sicilian estates are now the property of the present Lord Bolton.

The earldom of Nelson and the other British peerages, the hereditary pension, which amounts to $250 a week, and the Trafalgar House estate, went to Mrs. Bolton's son, that is to say, a nephew of the famous admiral. He became the second Earl Nelson, and the nonconformist Earl Nelson, reported as dying, is the third earl, and therefore, the grandnephew of the victor of Trafalgar.
